140. According to the text, all of the following are very specific issues that leadership training programs often focus on except:
(p. 334)
- A. conducting more accurate performance evaluations.
 - B. being a more effective mentor.
 - C. structuring creative problem solving.
 - D. particular leader behaviours such as initiating structure and consideration.
 - E. gaining more cultural awareness and sensitivity.

141. Describe the leader-member exchange theory. Explain the two types of dyads.
(p. 313)

Leader-member exchange theory describes how leader-member relationships develop over time on a dyadic basis. New leader-member relationships are typically marked by a role taking phase during which the manager describes the role expectations and the employee attempts to fulfill those expectations with his or her job behaviours. Eventually, it is supplemented by role making during which employee's own expectations for the dyad get mixed in with those of the leader. Over time, these processes result in two general types of dyads. Please see Figure 12-1 in the text.

142. Do you agree with the statement "Leaders are born, not made?" Explain. What traits/characteristics are related to leader emergence and leader effectiveness?
(p. 315-316)

Students should disagree with the statement. After a century of research, leadership scholars now acknowledge that there is no generalizable profile of effective leaders from a trait perspective. See Table 12-2 for traits/characteristics that are related to leader emergence and leader effectiveness.

143. Describe the four leader decision making styles using examples.

(p. 317-318)

Leader decision making styles:

Autocratic - leader makes the decision without asking employees for their opinions/suggestions

Consultative - leader presents the problem to the employees, gathers their opinions/suggestions and then makes the decision himself/herself; employees "have a say" in the process

Facilitative - leader presents the problem to employees and seeks consensus with the leader's opinion only as important as every other employee's

Delegative - leader gives employees the responsibility for making the decision within some set of specified boundary conditions

Student examples will vary. Please see Figure 12-2 in the text.

144. Describe the time-driven model of leadership using the seven factors.

(p. 318-320)

The model suggests that the focus should shift away from the leaders to the situations. The seven factors that guide the situational decision making styles are:

- Decision significance
- Importance of commitment
- Leader expertise
- Likelihood of commitment
- Shared objectives
- Employee expertise
- Teamwork skills

Please see Figure 12-3 in the text for the time-driven model of leadership.

148. What is transformational leadership? Describe the "four I's" of transformational leadership.
(p. 324-328)

Transformational leadership involves inspiring followers to commit to a shared vision that provides meaning to their work while also serving as a role model who helps followers develop their own potential and view problems from new perspectives. The "four I's" are:

- Idealized influence
- Inspirational motivation
- Intellectual stimulation
- Individualized consideration

149. Describe the substitutes of leadership model and identify and describe leader substitutes and neutralizers.
(p. 333-334)

The substitutes for leadership model suggest that certain characteristics of the situation can constrain the influence of the leader, making it more difficult for the leader to influence employee performance. Please see Table 12-4 for leader substitutes and neutralizers.
