MULTIPLE CHOICE. Choose the one alternative that best completes the statement or answers the question.

Refer to the scenario below to answer the following questions.

Carol Veldt, owner of Seagull Terrace, watched her investment grow from a small, seaside motel to a thriving year-round resort in just a few years. Atop a bluff overlooking the Maine coast, Seagull Terrace had attracted thousands of visits during the summer months, but then faced a tremendous downturn in business during the winter months. "But, given the industry in the nearby towns, very little year-round competition, and our close proximity to Portland," Carol added, "I couldn't understand why seasonality had to hit Seagull Terrace so hard!"

So Carol spent her first winter devising a new marketing plan. She put together a promotional package designed to attract business travelers year-round. Carol's plan, then, involved a seasonal promotional gimmick—to be implemented from early winter to late spring—that would attract the same numbers as the large summer crowd. Her idea worked! During her second winter, Carol greeted numerous business travelers—both satisfied repeat guests as well as new guests who had been snagged by her promotional appeals.

"We still have a long way to go," Carol admitted. "Our restaurant offers delicious entrees, but we'd like to expand that. We provide health club privileges off-site, but we'd like to eventually provide our own. These are goals I hope to achieve in a few years. Our first project, however, included a renovation of our guest rooms and I'm quite proud of the results." Carol then added, "Actually there are so many possibilities! With an indoor pool area, I will eventually offer weekend get-aways throughout winter."

- 157) Which of the following groups is specifically part of Seagull Terrace's target market? 157) _____
A) retirees
B) summer campers
C) young families
D) athletes

- 164) If Carol were to maintain an active Facebook page for Seagull Terrace past and potential guests , she would be practising marketing by 164) _____
- A) traditional methods
 - B) permission
 - C) aggression
 - D) intrusion
 - E) attraction
- 165) One of Seagull Terrace's regular guests has created a blog devoted to her summer stays at the resort. This has the potential to attract new guests to Seagull Terrace and is an example of 165) _____
- A) perceived customer-value
 - B) supply chain management
 - C) not-for-profit marketing
 - D) customer-generated marketing
 - E) partner relationship management

166) For Seagull Terrace to be successful, Carol must form the right relationships with the right customers. Some of her customers are quite profitable, spending money on many of the resort's services beyond accommodation, but not very loyal as they prefer to try out a new resort for each new holiday. These customers are considered to be

- A) switchers.
- B) butterflies.
- C) true friends.
- D) strangers.
- E) barnacles.

- 106) Human needs are states of felt deprivation. Needs are part of the human make-up; they are not created by external forces. Humans have a basic physical need for food, clothing, warmth, and safety; a basic social need for belonging and affection; and a basic individual need for knowledge and self-expression. Unlike needs, wants are not innate; instead, wants are needs shaped by culture, society, and individual personality. For example, an American needs food but wants a Big Mac and a soft drink. An American with ten dollars needs food, wants a Big Mac and soft drink, and demands lunch at McDonald's. Wants become demands when they are backed by consumers' buying power. Marketers conduct extensive research to understand customers' wants and demands. They then attempt to fulfill customers' wants and demands through their market offerings.
- 107) Sellers are most effective when they focus more on the benefits and experiences produced by their products and services than on the specific products and services themselves. Smart marketers focus on creating a brand experience, incorporating several products and services for their customers. By doing so, marketers hope to increase customer satisfaction, creating a body of customers who will repeatedly purchase their market offerings and recommend those offerings to friends.
- 108) The selling concept reflects an inside-out philosophy, while the marketing concept takes an outside-in perspective. The selling concept is typically practiced when an organization is marketing products or services that buyers do not normally think of purchasing, such as insurance or blood donation. Aggressive selling focuses on creating sales transactions rather than on building long-term relationships with customers, with the aim of selling what the company makes rather than making what the customer wants. The marketing concept, on the other hand, is based upon identifying the needs and wants of target markets and then satisfying those needs and wants better than competitors do. In contrast to the selling concept, marketing focuses on the customer, not the product, as the path to profits.
- 109) According to this concept, firms will succeed if they take underlying consumer needs and society's well being into account over the long term. A pure marketing concept can damage consumers' long-run welfare by focusing exclusively on satisfying consumers' short-run wants. Over a long period of time, this too-narrow focus can be damaging to the company. In setting their marketing strategies, marketers today need to balance company profits, consumer wants, and society's interests. Johnson & Johnson is an example of a company that has successfully implemented the societal marketing concept. The organization stresses honesty, integrity, and putting people before profits, an ethic that helped Johnson & Johnson quickly address and recover from the poisonous tampering of Tylenol capsules in 1982.
- 110) Customer Relationship Management (CRM) is the process of building and maintaining profitable customer relationships by delivering superior customer value and satisfaction. A company with mostly low-margin customers is likely to seek basic relationships, using brand-building advertising and sales promotion. An organization with few customers and high margins, on the other hand, will work to create key partnerships with select customers. To create stronger bonds with customers, some marketers use tools such as financial benefits or rewards based on frequency of purchase. Other tools include social benefits, like offering key customers the opportunity to network and create communities through club marketing programs. Another approach adds structural ties to the aforementioned financial and social benefits. Hence, to retain current customers and remain profitable, companies today are going beyond transactional marketing to customer relationship management. The key is to create and sustain relationships for the long term.
- 111) Customer satisfaction cannot be taken for granted. Because brand loyalty is dependent upon strong customer satisfaction, companies strive to retain, satisfy, and even delight current customers. Firms create customer delight by promising only what they can deliver and then delivering more than what they promised. They also create emotional relationships with key customers. Delighted customers make repeated purchases and become customers for life. More importantly, they also essentially become an unpaid sales force for the firm as "customer evangelists" who tell other potential customers about their positive experiences with the product.

- 112) Through the Internet and related technologies, people can now interact in direct and surprisingly personal ways with large groups of others, from neighbours within a local community to people across the world. With communication technologies such as e-mail, blogs, Web sites, online communities, and online social networks, today's marketers incorporate interactive approaches that help build targeted, two-way customer relationships. Marketers can create deeper consumer involvement and a sense of community surrounding a brand, making a brand a meaningful part of consumers' conversations and lives. However, while new communication tools create relationship-building opportunities for marketers, they also create challenges. They give consumers a greater voice, and therefore greater power and control in the marketplace. Today's consumers have more information about brands than ever before, and they have a wealth of platforms for airing and sharing their brand views with other consumers. This benefits companies when views of its products are positive, but can be damaging when customers share stories of negative experiences with a company's products.
- 113) Customer equity is the sum of the lifetime values of all a company's current and potential customers. Customer equity is dependent upon customer loyalty from a firm's profitable customers. Because customer equity is a reflection of a company's future, companies must manage it carefully, viewing customers as assets that need to be maximized. To increase customer equity, companies should work to delight their customers and establish full relationships with their most profitable customers.
- 114) The four types of customers are strangers, butterflies, true friends, and barnacles. "Strangers" have low potential profitability and loyalty. A company's offerings do not fit well with a stranger's wants and demands. Companies should not invest in building a relationship with this type of customer. Another type of customer in which a company should not invest is the "barnacle." Barnacles are highly loyal but not very profitable because there is a limited fit between their needs and the company's offerings. The company might be able to improve barnacles' profitability by selling them more, raising their fees, or reducing service to them. However, if they cannot be made profitable, they should be "fired." Like strangers, "butterflies" are not loyal. However, they are potentially profitable because there is a good fit between the company's offerings and their needs. Like real butterflies, this type of customer will come and go without becoming a permanent, loyal consumer of a company's products. Companies should use promotional blitzes to attract these customers, create satisfying and profitable transactions with them, and then cease investing in them until the next time around. The final type of customers is "true friends"; they are both profitable and loyal. There is a strong fit between their needs and the company's offerings, so the company should make continuous relationship investments in an effort to go beyond satisfying and to delight these customers. A company should try to convert true friends into customer evangelists who tell others about their good experiences with the company.
- 115) During the overheated Web frenzy of the late 1990s, dot-coms popped up everywhere. The frenzy cooled during the "dot-com meltdown" of 2000, when many poorly conceived e-tailers and other Web start-ups went out of business. Today, a new version of the Internet has emerged—a "second coming" of the Web, often referred to as Web 2.0. Web 2.0 involves a more reasoned and balanced approach to marketing online. It also offers a fast-growing set of new Web technologies for connecting with customers, such as weblogs (blogs) and vlogs (videobased blogs), social networking sites, and video-sharing sites. The interactive, community-building nature of these new technologies makes them ideal for relating with consumers.

- 138) Such manufacturers should focus on the benefits enjoyed through the use of their products-access to the great outdoors, shared family experiences, and relived memories of the consumer's youth.
- 139) Wal-Mart must rely on suppliers that will provide merchandise at low costs, a low-cost and efficient distribution system, an accurate and efficient customer relationship database system, and a strong partnership with each of the members of its supply chain.
- 140) The production concept holds that consumers favour products that are available and affordable. With this concept, manufacturers work to increase production and improve manufacturing efficiency, and thus eventually lower the price paid by the consumer.
- 141) In considering Bead Beautiful's value proposition, the marketing team should identify the benefits and values the company promises to deliver to customers to satisfy their needs. The value proposition should differentiate Bead Beautiful from other similar products, answering the customer's question "Why should I buy this brand rather than a competitor's?"
- 142) The company's aim is to sell its supplies rather than make what the market wants; such a strategy creates sales transactions but not long-term relationships. The company's likely faulty assumption is that customers who are persuaded to buy the product will like it or that they will buy the product again even if they weren't really initially satisfied. Company X will not foster customer loyalty with this approach.
- 143) The vendor's approach was inside-out. The cockles and mussels are available. The vendor's job was then to attract willing buyers.
- 144) In such industries, consumers do not know exactly what new products are available; therefore, consumers rely on such firms to tell them what they need.
- 145) Managing detailed information about customers may allow Saturn to design new models around customer demographics and desires for specific features. These "touchpoints" can be the key to long-term customer loyalty.
- 146) The type of relationship a seller seeks to create with its customers is dependent on the number of customers and their profitability. A company with many low-margin customers develops basic relationships; a company with just a few high-margin customers invests resources to create full partnerships.
- 147) The marketer can offer greater variety to customers; in addition, the marketer can train employees to cross-sell and up-sell in order to market more products and services to existing customers.
- 148) "Butterflies" are profitable but not loyal. Marketers should enjoy this type of customer "for the moment" because they soon flutter off. Marketers should create profitable and satisfying transactions with "butterflies," then cease investing in them until the next time around. Marketers can expect transactions with butterflies when conditions are optimal for the customer, but they should not expect butterflies to become loyal customers.
- 149) Able could use videoconferencing to monitor customer focus groups discussing the company's products and services in various locations. Able could use online data services to learn more about the needs and wants of his customers, or he could create a customer database for the company to target individual customers with tailored offers.
- 150) A local retailer might have global suppliers and customers. The retailer's goods may come from abroad, or components of those goods may be produced or assembled abroad. In addition, a local retailer may also sell goods over the Internet to international customers.
- 151) Firms in the not-for-profit sector use marketing to enhance their images, to encourage donor marketing to attract memberships and donors, and to design social marketing campaigns to encourage specific causes.

- 152) Some marketers seek fewer customers and reduced demand. For example, many power companies have trouble meeting demand during peak usage periods. In these and other cases of excess demand, companies may practise demarketing to reduce the number of customers or to shift their demand temporarily or permanently. In March 2009 BC Hydro launched a campaign to get 210 000 British Columbians to reduce their power usage by 10 percent, with the goal of conserving the saved electricity to power the 2010 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games. By joining "Team Power Smart," consumers could access tools to help track their conservation targets and have a chance to win Olympics tickets.
- 153) The societal marketing concept holds that marketing strategy should deliver value to customers in a way that maintains or improves both the consumer's and society's well-being. Johnson & Johnson's management has learned that doing what's right benefits both consumers and the company. As the founding corporate sponsor of Safe Kids Canada, Johnson & Johnson continues to show its dedication to being a world leader in childcare. Thus, over the years, Johnson & Johnson's dedication to consumers and community service has made it one of North America's most admired companies and one of the most profitable.
- 154) Marketing by attraction is about creating market offerings and messages that involve consumers rather than interrupt them. For example, Molson Canadian maintains an active Facebook page where almost 28 000 consumers of the brand share information with the company and other consumers. The company's 2010 Mural Project, designed to build the largest photo mosaic ever constructed in Canada in support of Canada's Olympic athletes, encourages consumers to submit their photos online and become part of Olympic history.
- 155) British Columbia-based lululemon, a yoga-inspired athletic apparel company, manufactures its products in seven countries and has over 100 retail locations in Canada, the United States, Australia, and Hong Kong.
- 156) Selling an intangible product to people with only a limited marketing budget is the first obvious challenge. The more subtle hurdle, however, is the fierce competition for a small share of consumers' discretionary income. Not-for-profit marketers also need impeccable ethics. Donors constantly look for assurance that their charitable dollars are not being wasted on needless marketing expenses.
