

This reaction is called "transesterification" and is a common examination question.

The ability to get a positive result in the haloform test for molecules such as this only works for the iodoform test. This is common testing material.

